AGAIN the season approaches when LIFE feels called upon to congratulate the graduating classes. While envying the buoyancy and hope of the young man who steps out into the world with a conquering eye, LIFE feels it his duty to observe that immediate victory is not always to the strong. Moreover, the world is a thankless oyster, and upon more than one occasion has refused to be opened.

THERE is one person for whom the Blaine boom has no charms. That person is Mr. Blaine. Individuals before now have believed that Mr. Blaine wasn't fit to be President, but at least one individual knows this year that he isn't fit to run. In spite of the pressure upon the Secretary, and of the prospects that the firmament at Minneapolis will be obscured by anti-Harrison hats thrown up in his honor, LIFE has no more expectation of seeing Mr. Blaine run, than of seeing him go over Niagara Falls. If his name must go on the ticket, his friends should put it in the second place, with some able-bodied young man to stand between him and hard work. It would be indefinitely better that the able-bodied junior should head for the White House direct, than that he should try to ride in the back way sitting astraddle of a coffin.

IF the churches do not take kindly to Parson Rainsford's plan of having them manage saloons, the alternative suggests itself of having the saloons open churches. Either way will do, but it must be clearly understood that, if the church people start saloons they must be thoroughly satisfactory saloons, serving a good quality of stimulant under comfortable conditions. Conversely if the saloon people open churches, they must be churches that people will want to go to, and which will promote the moral and spiritual welfare of the people who frequent them. It is hard to say whether it would benefit the community more to have the church people zealously interested in the saloons, or the saloon people thoroughly waked up about the churches. To have these two important elements working together for their mutual advantage and profit would be a truly millennial development. Difficulties about Sunday Liquor laws would fade out before such a combine like Presidential booms before a convention roll-call.

INASMUCH as the officers of justice seem unequal to the job of keeping O'Brien in confinement, suppose they address themselves now to the effort to keep him out of society. So long as he flocks by himself he can't do very much harm.

Men have been self-satisfied, self-sufficient, self-deceived, but very rarely self-buncoed. In that particular the midwinter-convention men were very exceptional.

THE intention of the new Chicago University to start complete is illustrated by the announcement that provision has been made for a University press, and for daily, monthly and quarterly college papers to be issued by the students. The experience of other colleges has been that when once the students got there the college papers took care of themselves. President Harper, however, believes in leaving nothing to chance. If hazing were essential any more to the existence of a real University, it cannot be doubted that he would have a hazing apparatus ready for his lads when they arrived. Never before was there such a layette provided against the coming of an educational infant as President Harper has laid in for his nascent University.

THERE is no politics in the Damrosch baby. Experienced statesmen who have listened to it from across the street, say that its preference, if any, seems to be for Wagner. Anyhow it isn't for Blaine. It understands already that a grandfather in the hand is worth a whole regiment of Presidential phantoms.

GOV. RUSSELL of Massachusetts has appointed a deaf-mute to be a justice of the peace. In view of a recent exploit of Judge Duffy's, it would seem that so long as attempted suicide is felony in this State, it might be a merciful provision to have at least one deaf-mute police-justice to take charge of would-be suicide's letters.

THE influence of the congressional "leave to print" habit appears in the intelligence that stenographic typewriters are to be provided free to newspaper men at Minneapolis.

A MIS-QUOTATION.

"HAVE you never felt moods too subtle and evasive for the cold interpretation of unromantic prose?" asked Reginald De Spouter as he gazed eagerly into the tender face beside him. "For instance, can you imagine the infinite yearning which filled Longfellow's soul as his mighty heart throbbed with,

'A feeling of sadness and longing—
A longing to be kissed,
That resembles sorrow only
As the rain resembles mist.'"

"Did Longfellow really say that?" she asked, as a crimson splendor more glorious than a Mediterranean sunset shot across her fair young Boston face.

"I think those were his exact words," replied the unblushing deceiver.

"Then, if Longfellow said it," she murmured gently, "I—I think, Reggy, you might."

NORTH IS NORTH, AND SOUTH IS SOUTH.

THE volume of essays which Thomas Nelson Page has collected under the title of "The Old South" (Scribner's) is full of the charm which comes from ample knowledge of the life, and a hearty love of it. A Southerner loves his home, his people, and his State, for reasons that have little hold on a Northerner. Relative merit has very little to do with it; his home may be inferior to any in the country, his people not so prosperous, and his State disgraced, perhaps, by repudiation—yet because they are his, a part of his bone and flesh are inherited traditions, he loves them with a passion that is blind to their faults. It is this hallucination, akin to a mother's unreasoning affection for her child, which makes every genuine man and woman of the South something of a poet, an idealist protected from the harsh things of the world by an invisible atmosphere of imagination; and if you really believe these things, they are, to all practical intents, so; if you believe that your family, your possessions, and your State are superior to all others for your needs and purposes, why no other realities that you might achieve could add to your happiness.

Mr. Page's analysis of the causes which produced the people of the Old South, accounts for this trait indirectly by tracing the parent stocks to the old Cavaliers and to the Scotch Irish—the one the embodiment of chivalry, the other of integrity and fervor for the right. On these was built a most charming family life, the beauty of which persists and always will add a grace to the South and a stability to its people. In the South there is no claim on a man which is paramount to that of his parents, brothers and sisters; in the North we believe that we are like-minded, but we neglect few occasions to fight over a family will, if an attorney can find a loop-hole in it. In the North the social unit is the individual man or woman against every other man or woman; in the South it is the undivided family against the world.

NO one has ever gone away from that home-loving atmosphere of the South to find his way among the individualists of the North, who has not suffered for long years from the chill and isolation of it. He finds no doubt friends as true, more helpful perhaps at the right time, more executive in their means of aid; but the old buffer between him and the world is missing—that sense of being a part of an organism which is stronger against fate than he is, and which bears him up by its sympathy and good-will.

The man of the North can easily reply to all this that he does not wear his heart on his sleeve; that he would rather work hard, persistently, selfishly, to save his family from the vicissitudes of life, than to pour effusive sympathy on them for disasters which his own foresight and theirs might have averted. He can add that sympathy is usually a mere swapping of weaknesses, and a salve which each one applies to the hurts made by his own folly.

A REAL PHILOSOPHER can do nothing better than paraphrase Kipling for them both:

"Oh, North is North, and South is South, and never the twain shall meet,
Till Earth and Sky stand presently at God's great Judgment Seat,
But there is neither North nor South, Border, nor Breed, nor Birth,
When two strong men stand face to face, tho' they come from the ends of the earth!"

AT the present writing Mr. Blaine is standing on the brink of the Presidential puddle, dabbling his toes in the water and trying to make up his mind whether it is warm enough for him. Mrs. Blaine has said he might—his physical condition is better—his Republican friends are calling him—and there seems no reason why he should not take the plunge. So far Mr. Harrison has had a monopoly of the swimming. He is likely to get a ducking that he will remember if Mr. Blaine goes in, and if current reports are to be believed he is not contemplating the prospect with unalloyed delight.

E. SILBER DELUGE.

DR. RAINSFORD'S startling proposition to sanctify the beer traffic by establishing saloons to be run by Christians, seems to LIFE an encouraging symptom for Christianity. For many centuries practical Christianity has been a compromise between the religion taught by Christ and the requirements of human nature. Apparently consistent Christians have eschewed the communistic life of poverty and constant self-sacrifice. They have indulged in the luxuries of their time without being tortured by their consciences. Hitherto religion has set its face against any common-sense compromise with the liquor traffic and kindred evils, but Dr. Rainsford's view of the question seems like a rift in the cloud which may let a little sense into the churchly view of these important matters. The reverend doctor has not gone into details yet, but his general statement leads to the hope that a compromise may yet be found between bigotry and the other extreme.

• LIFE •

LEO TOLSTOI, the Russian novelist, who has ideas of his own as to the right of the community to punish its offending members, saw the other day a policeman take an individual into custody. He at once walked up to the constable and said:

"Can you read?"

"Certainly, sir."

"Have you read the Scriptures?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then you forget that they command us to love our neighbors as ourselves."

The minion of the law, quite taken aback, stared at the Count, then, after a moment's reflection, made answer:

"And, pray, can you read?"

"Yes."

"Have you read the police regulations?"

"No."

"Then read them."—Novoje Vremja.

"I HAVE lived in Philadelphia all my life," said the man on the southern railroad, "but this is too much;" and he got off and walked.—Harvard Lampoon.

THE celebrated French poet, Saint Foix, who, in spite of his large income, was always in debt, sat one day in a barber's shop waiting to be shaved. He was lathered, when the door opened and a tradesman entered who happened to be one of the poet's largest creditors. No sooner did this man see Saint Foix than he angrily demanded his money. The poet composedly begged him not to make a scene.

"Won't you wait for the money until I am shaved?"

"Certainly," said the other, pleased at the prospect.

Saint Foix then made the barber a witness of the agreement, and immediately took a towel, wiped the lather from his face, and left the shop. He wore a beard to the end of his days.—Exchange.

THERE is a girl in town who tells this story on herself. She is a zealous member of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Seeing in the street, one day, a cab-driver cruelly maltreating his horse, she went up to him, and, showing her badge, demanded his number.

"Lord, miss," said the man, with a commiserating smile, "ef I wuz ter tell yer, it would go out of that pretty head afore yer got to the next corner."

Then he drove on, leaving the girl torn between conflicting emotions, anger and the desire to laugh.—Washington Post.

THEY were talking to Guibollard about the rise of the Seine, when he exclaimed, "It is all humbug! I went to Chatou yesterday; the water seems to have risen, but it is a mere deception."

"How so?"

"I had chalked a mark on my boat, and it's in the same place yet."—Le Telegraph.

THE LAST WORDS OF THOMAS CARLYLE.

Including "Wotton Reinfred," Carlyle's only essay in fiction; the "Excursion (Futile Enough) to Paris"; and Letters from Thomas Carlyle and Mrs. Carlyle. With Portrait. 12mo. Cloth, gilt top, $1.75.

"Wotton Reinfred" is Carlyle's only novel. The "Excursion (Futile Enough) to Paris" is a most characteristic account of a journey to Paris in 1851 in company with the Brownings, and a visit to Lord Ashburton, furnishing a singularly vivid picture of Carlyle's personality and peculiarities. The letters from Carlyle describe the preparation of his "Frederick the Great." This important addition to Carlyle's works is the first of his books to have an American copyright.

"No complete edition of the Sage of Chelsea will be able to ignore these manuscripts."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE JEW AT HOME.

By JOSEPH PENNELL. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00.

This brilliant artist-author has visited and studied the Jewish towns of Hungary, Austria, and the Russian frontier, and the results of his observations will be found both in his text and in a series of striking illustrations. Mr. Pennell's work in art is so well known that it is unnecessary to emphasize the value of these studies of a life with which Americans are being brought into close relations. There has been no presentation of the subject of equal force.

MEN, MINES AND ANIMALS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

By LORD RANDOLPH S. CHURCHILL. With Portrait, Sixty-five Illustrations and a Map. 8vo, 337 pages. Cloth, $5.00.

An individual and entertaining book of travels. It contains picturesque and humorous descriptions of scenes in the diamond-mines and gold-fields, of hunting in Bechuanaland and life in Mashonaland, and adventures with lions and elephants are interspersed among many characteristic comments upon people, manners and customs, and practical resources. The large number of illustrations are a most helpful re-enforcement to the text.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers.

BAUME HYGIËNIQUE.

A distinguished French savant has discovered in Nature an element that is bland and harmless in its action, and which has a particularly beneficial effect on sensitive skins by allaying inflammation, and by bleaching the epidermis to a transparent whiteness. He has combined this element with an unguent that nourishes the most delicate tissues underlying the skin. This hygienic combination, composed solely of Nature's curatives, is absolutely free from all poisonous ingredients, and can be used with impunity. It revivifies the skin by restoring the natural action of the cuticle, removes redness, roughness, and chapping of the face and hands caused by our trying climate, and prevents wrinkling and aging of the exposed skin. Complexions ruined by corrosive preparations of mercury and zinc, compounded by unskilful makers, irritated by the application of glycerine, can be restored to freshness, whiteness, and velvety softness by the use of
